Editorial

Research which holds the tertiary level in the higher education scenario has risen to a position of prime importance thanks to modifications in UGC regulations. Consequently journals and publications also occupy a position of considerable significance in the academic climate of today. 'Publish or perish' has become the watch word in the academic survival kit. Hence the time old position of teachers as moulding agents of young minds through instruction alone has undergone a sea change. Today's professors are not just expected to take classes and be contented; instead they are required to pursue research that may benefit the society and offer solutions to emergent theoretical issues. They need to motivate their students to explore the hitherto unmarked or rarely marked areas of enquiry and to contribute to the ever expanding world of knowledge by publishing the new lines of thought that they have developed.

Journals are the space that every scholar gets to initiate a thought process on any new perspective in any branch of knowledge and here is an exhortation to make maximum use of the facilities available to get into the exciting world of research paper writing, not just because it is mandatory to do so, but it is also a means to tell oneself that one is contributing to the epistemological content of the world in whatever way we can. A researcher once said that he felt alive only when he was writing a research paper and getting it published. Even though such extreme measures are not required, it is desirable to hone one's research skills and get ahead for the world of discourse holds a lot of mysteries for us to explore and express.

The Light That We Need

An ideal society is productive and progressive and it promotes Goodwill, cherishes camaraderie and guarantees the welfare of everyone without any discrimination. It makes you love the rich and poor, the clouds and the birds, the trees, the rocks, the rivers, the mountains and the waves in the Ocean. For this, certain conditions, indeed, are to be satisfied. That is why from time immemorial, thinkers have asked us to set a goal before we launch into something and to achieve it one has to work hard, with all sincerity, dedication and determination. Swami Vivekanda put it in these words: "Arise, Awake and Sleep not until the goal is reached."

The balance of life in this society can be achieved only through the total development of the personality. This sense has to be inculcated right from an early age. That is why they say: 'Catch them young.' As the Malayalam poet reminds as 'the habits cultivated at a young age, will not be forgotten as long as we live.' So one should start planning and doing things quite early. Herein comes the importance of education. We do need a teacher other than Mother Nature. The teacher will mould you and can help you scale great heights. Thus he/she can help form an ideal society. It's his/her responsibility, unavoidable and Divine. He can guarantee the full blossoming of an individual –mentally, physically and even spiritually.

In our younger days our parents guide us in the right direction. The mothers take care of the young one's bodily comfort and development. Both parents are keenly observant about their behavior to the elders, their relationship with their brothers, sisters and friends. They would note how they react in difficult and different situations, how confidently they meet the challenges etc. This is the time that they need the maximum support. If the right kind of attitude is to be maintained as the child grows up, the teachers should play their part well.

A teacher should ever be "a friend, Philosopher and guide." These days, for many, teaching has become a mere job. This is dangerous. Most of the problems of the society can rightly be attributed to this disinterestedness of the teachers. The youngsters need our support through out – from their pre-primary stage to the college days. Remember, during this period they are full of tremendous energy. It is our bounden duty to channelize it in the right direction.

Of course, the Priests, the Pujaris and Mullahs can do a great deal. But as there are no good models the responsibility of the teachers has multiplied hundredfold. Inculcating in the youngsters certain high ideals is absolutely necessary. It should never be limited to the 'lecture method'. The teacher's life should be a text for them to follow. As the students often imitate teachers, the teachers should be a working model.

If the balance is kept up new ideas will spring up. The thinking process will be incited. In other words, creativity will be awakened, New Scientists, new writers, new artists, new workers, new philosophers will emerge. Let the children dream. "Those who work more, do dream more" they say. It sows the seeds of a perfect vision, with which, one can inspire a student. That, indeed, is real education.
